

In the case of Bodebo Store, the judges valued the refreshing no-fuss intervention of the renewed interior, as well as the straightforwardness and efficiency in the use of the different ceramic tiles.

The “cartabón” (triangle) tiles, featured on the counters and walls of the original store, have again been used for the display units for the loose products and the sales counter, although this time they combine white glazed and unglazed sections revealing the terracotta biscuit in a break from the classical layout.
